

Taking on Leadership to Promote Youth Leadership

Suran Maharjan, Nepal
in 'Sprouting Seeds of Radical Education'

"I was consistently observing and reflecting on 'how' and 'why.' 'What' is usually obvious, but looking for a deeper understanding of an issue, searching for how and why are essential. These powerful questions make a young professional more insightful, self-reliant, and aware that learning is a lifelong process.

This idea of learning everywhere matters to me; it helps me to take more risks and face challenges. I seek continuous change within myself and am keen to initiate an avenue for youth who have a desire to work for change and express leadership in their own contexts."

Suran Maharjan explores his own journey as a life-long learner, subtle differences between leader and leadership in his work and personal life, and his hunger for critical reflections and learning from every situation, making him a thoughtful change maker.

Read his essay and find ways to reflect on your own work, life!

